TRIAL OF CRAIG.

Rero antecedentem scelestum
Deseruit pede poena claudo. [HORACE

Punishment though sometimes lame of foot, seldom fails to overtake the guilty.

This was one of the most interseting cases that ever engaged the attention of a court and jury, and afforded an instructive lesson in human nature. It presented a complete history of the operations of a mind, conceiving, plotting, and executing a horrid murder, afterwards labouring under the weight of guilt, in flight, in temporary security, arrested, discharged after an examination, confessing to a friend, again arrested and committed to custody. Forty-seven witnesses were examined on the part of the commonwealth, who traced the assassin, step, by step, from the moment he took the instrument of death into his hands, until his final apprehension. The circumstantial evidence of his guilt, was such as not to leave "a loop on which to hang a doubt," independent of his confession which was fully and clearly proved. The prosecution was managed with great ability, and the evidence brought forward so as to present the circumstances in the most logical and luminous point of view. No link in the chain was wanting, & every one in its proper place. The evidence of the daughters, who heard the report of the gun and immediately ran to their father's assistance, was delivered in a style of artless simplicity, and was truly affecting. They spoke of the gun as having made an unusual loud report; their father, when first struck, thought it was lightning, from the sudden flash and sharpness of the stroke, both of which came before the report, his back being turned towards the person who shot.

Every thing that ingenuity and eloquence could do, was employed by the prisoner's counsel in his defence. Mr. Tilghman's speech was a masterly address to the feelings of the jury, in which he occupied about three hours, without any one's perceiving that time lingered. The prisoner exercised his right of challenge to the full extent, and every individual of his jury were of that religious sect who take the affirmation. They agreed upon their verdict in about an hour after retiring from the box.—When they came in it was near ten o'clock on Saturday evening. The court-house had not been so thronged during the trial. After they had given in their verdict a pause of fifteen minutes ensued, during which time an awful silence prevailed. It was like the stillness of death. The pulse almost ceased to play, from sympathy in the approaching fate of the prisoner.

His Honour the presiding Judge addressed him in terms of the most affecting interest: with softened dignity, great tenderness, and true piety, he exhorted him to prepare to die: he pronounced the awful sentence with a faultering voice, and the prayer to Almighty God to have mercy upon his soul, seemed to come from a feeling heart. It was a scene, which, no one who witnessed will ever forget.

Chester Federalist.

THE HORSE AND VIPER.

By a late report read before the Royal institute of France, it appears that the great viper, called Fer de lance, is one of the most dreadful scourges of the West Indies, but is found only in Martinique, St. Lucia, and another small island. This viper is so savage, that the moment it sees any person, it erects itself, and springs upon him. In raising itself, it rests upon four equal circles, formed by the lower part of the body; when it springs, these circles are suddenly dissolved After the spring, if it should miss its object, it may be attacked with advantage; but this requires considerable courage; for as soon as it can erect itself again, the assailant runs the greatest risk of being bitten. Often, too, it is so bold, as to follow its enemy by leaps and bounds, instead of fleeing from him; and it does not cease the pursuit till its revenge is glutted. In its erect position it is so much the more formidable, because it is as high as a man, and can even bite a person on horseback. M. Morreau de Jonnes was once riding through a wood, when his horse reared; and when the rider looked round to discover the cause of the animal's terror, he perceived a Fer de lance viper standing quite erect in a bush of bamboo; & heard it hiss several times. He would have fired at it with his pistol, but the affrighted horse drew back so ungovernably that he was obliged to look about for somebody to hold him. He now espied at some distance, a negro upon the ground, wallowing in his blood, & cutting with a blunt knife flesh from the wound occasioned by the bite of the same viper. When the author acquainted him with his intention of killing the serpent, he earnestly opposed it, as he wished to take it alive and make use of it for his cure, according to the superstitious notion of the negroes. He presently rose, cut some lianes, made a snare with them, and concealing himself behind the bush, near the viper, he attracted its attention by a low whistling noise, and suddenly throwing a noose over the animal, drew it tight, and secured his enemy. M. Morreau saw this negro a twelvemonth afterwards, but he had not perfectly recovered the use of the limb bitten by the viper. The negroes persecute these vipers with the greatest cerimony. When they have killed one, they cut off its head, and bury it deep in the earth, that no mischief may be done by the fangs, which are dangerous after the death of the animal. Men & beasts shun this formidable reptile; the birds manifest the same antipathy for that, as they do for owls in Europe, and a small one of the loxia kind, even gives warning by its cry, that a viper is at hand.

Miscellany.

[From the London Literary Gazette.]

ON TASTE IN FEMALE DRESS.

Personal neatness may almost be classed with the cardinal virtues. It was an observation of Lavater, that persons habitually attentive to dress, display the same regularity in their domestick affairs.—"Young women," "says he who neglect their toilette, and manifest little concern about dress, indicate in this very particular a disregard of order, a mind but ill-adapted to the details of housekeeping: a deficiency of taste, and of the qualities that inspire love: they will be careless in every thing. The girl of eighteen, who desires not to please, will be a slut and a shrew at twenty-five. Pay attention, young men, to this sign. It never yet was known to deceive." Husbands, as well as lovers, are gratified and delighted in seeing their partners handsomely adorned; and I am well convinced that many a heart, now roving in quest of variety, might have been detained in willing captivity at home, by the silken chains of personal decoration. It is one of the moral duties of every married woman always to appear well dressed in the presence of her husband. To effect this, expensiveness of attire is by no means requisite. The simplest robe may evince the wearer's taste as nobly as the most gorgeous brocade.

The natural figure of a woman is of the first importance in determining the style of her dress. What sight, for instance, can be more preposterous than that of a short, thick, broad shouldered, fat female, in a spencer? It has been well observed, too, that, "short women destroy their symmetry, and encumber their charms, by all redundancy of ornament," and that "a little woman, feathered and furbelow'd, looks like a queen of the Bantam tribe."

Nor is the substance of which dresses are composed, unworthy of notice. Making due allowance for the season, that which will display or soften the contour of the form, with most propriety and effect, should always be preferred. The Roman ladies had their ventus textilis and their linea nebula—linen so fine as to acquire those names; and, from the transparent muslin to the substantial silk, the merino and kerseymere, our variety of texture is almost infinite. Thus, whilst the sylph-formed maiden may be allowed to float in gossamer, the more matured and portly female should adopt a fabrick better suited to her size, her figure, and her time of life.

There is nothing, perhaps, more difficult of choice or more delusive to the wearer, than colours; and nothing more offensive to the educated eye, than colours ill-chosen, ill-adapted, or ill combined.

"Let the fair nymph, in whose plump cheek is seen
A constant blush, be clad in cheerful green;
In such a dress the sportive sea-nymphs go;
So in their grassy bed fresh roses blow."

It has been remarked, however, that grass-green, tho' a colour exceedingly pleasing and refreshing in itself, jaundices the pale woman to such a degree, as to excite little other sensation than compassion in the beholder.

"—— Maids grown pale with sickness or despair,
The sable's mournful dye should choose to wear;
So the pale moon still shines with purest light,
Cloth'd in the dusky mantle of the night."

Ladies of a pale complexion, I conceive, should seldom, if ever, wear a dress of an entire colour. Their white drapery, at least, might be relieved, and animated, by ribands, flowers, &c. of delicate tints; such as light pink, or blossom colour. On the other hand,

The lass whose skin is like the hazel brown,
With brighter yellow should o'ercome her own!"

She may even, without fear of offence, assume the orange, the scarlet, the coquelicot, the flame colour, or the deep rose; either of which will heighten the animated tone of her complexion, and impart a more dazzling lustre to her eye.

It is not within the province of an old man, Mr. Editor, to descend into the minutiæ of female attire; to prescribe the cut of a robe, the fall of a mantle, or the shape of a bonnet. These points may very safely be left to a consultation between the lady and her dress-maker; the cultivated taste of the former regulating and checking the meretricious fancy of the latter. In the hope that the hints which I have offered may prove of some utility, I remain, &c.

SENEX.

POWDER.

To powder the hair, and to give the color one desires, is a very old fashion. Josephus relates, that the horse grenadiers of King Solomon, used every day gold powder, that their hair might glitter in the sun. The ancient beauties of Italy powdered themselves even with gold. Grecian princesses ordered their body guards to throw gold powder in their hair. Among the fashionable persons of both sexes in ancient Rome, fair hair was regarded the most beautiful; but after being painted and perfumed, according to the customs of Asia, it was powdered with gold. The Emperors Verus and Commodus favored particularly this fashion. The head of Commodus, when in the sun, glittered as if it had been in flames.

The powder of our days was, however unknown to the ancients. The idea, that it dates only from the period when wigs were invented, is not right. It was used long before, and was invented in France.—Though it was not common in the beginning of the reign of Louis XIV. this Prince certainly used it, without approving it. It was to please one of his mistresses, that he ordered his large long black wig to be powdered. Brantome mentions, that Margaretta of Valois, did every thing in her power to make her dark hair lighter; but in vain Had, in her time, 1752, our hair powder been invented, she would have easily obtained her wishes.

In the beginning, it was regarded as a sin to powder one's hair; and, as such, the priests excommunicated it. In an old French Gazette, of 1593, it is related as a terrible reproach, that nuns were seen walking in the streets of Paris with their hair in curls, with powder. In the end of the seventeenth century, the comedians were the only persons who powdered themselves, and that only when upon the stage: when the plays were over, they combed out the powder. One of the causes why their corpses were not permitted to be buried in christian church yards in France and Italy, was the sacrilegious use of hair powder, according to the pastoral letters of the prelates of those times. In a printed regulation concerning the Police of Paris, 1602, all prostitutes are ordered to powder their hair on the right side, and to paint with rouge the left part of their faces, under pain of being sent to houses of correction, or to convents of repentance. In the same regulation, all gamesters, bankrupts and quacks were ordered to paint their noses with rouge, and to powder the back part of their hair, under pain of being sent to the gallies. Sorcerers and witches, under pain of being burnt with hot irons, were ordered to powder the fore part of their hair, and to paint the under part of their faces with rouge couleur de feu.

Three sorts of powder were only known formerly; white, grey and black. Yellow powder became fashionable fifty years ago, particularly when persons were dressed in black. At Paris every possible shade of hair powder even green and blue, has since been made and used. In the time of Robespierre, the fashionable sans Culottes of both sexes used powder and red wigs, to evince their patriotism and approbation of this revolutionary tyrant's reign of blood.—Under the Directory, no powder was worn, and under Bonaparte, grey and white powders were most fashionable.

PITTSBURGH,

FRIDAY, MAY 8, 1818.

This number of the Gazette is the last that will be issued by the present editor in his sole capacity. The next number, under the editorship of John I. Scull and M. Neville will (on Tuesday the 19th inst.) appear in the renovated and enlarged form which was lately announced. That interval in the publication will be absolutely required, for the removal of our office, and to enable our workmen to set up the paper in the new type which we have just procured for the purpose.

The late publisher would wish this line his last, if he could find in his heart to take such French leave of his subscribers without casting "one longing lingering look behind". While he is preparing to enjoy an exemption from the exclusive cares and painful responsibilities of editorship, by having associated a partner in the concern, he cannot forbear expressing his gratitude for the liberality with which he has been treated, during the short period of his sole editorship.

For his errors, which probably were many, and no doubt more than he can be aware of, he has but to plead his youth—his inexperience—and to throw himself upon their indulgence and candour. He trusts it was ever apparent that it was his firm resolve, and inclination, never to write a solitary word except what duty seemed to dictate; and he is not apprised of having called forth any censure, or conscious of having merited any. He hopes therefore, that his patrons will accept this poor testimony of a thousand grateful sentiments unexpressed, and suffer him to retire in the mutuality of kindly feelings—and that there is generous worth to greet his return, if circumstances should again call him to an active participation of editorial duties.

Those indebted to the editor of this Gazette, for subscription, advertising, &c. are earnestly requested to make immediate payment.

The Salem Gazette says, "The feelings of the people of Cheeacco have of late been grossly outraged!—the sacred depository of the dead has been rifled of the remains of their departed friends. No less than eight empty coffins have been found in the grave yard of that parish, and one in the neighbouring precinct parish of Gloucester. The excitement among the people by this sacrilegious act is great; a parish meeting has been called, and a large reward has been subscribed by individuals for a discovery of the perpetrators, which we hope will be effectual, and that hereafter the bones of the dead will remain undisturbed in the place where the affection of their friends has placed them."

INDIAN WAR.

LATEST FROM THE ARMY.

MILLEDGEVILLE, April 18, 1818. A letter from Gen. Glascock to the editors of the Journal, dated Fort St. Marks, 7th April, states, that on the 1st. inst. a skirmish took place between the advance of the army and a portion of the Mickasuka Indians, (most of them having fled on the approach of our troops.) The Tennessee detachment rushed forward, and participated slightly in the action; they had one man killed and four wounded—seven of the enemy were slain; their number of wounded is not known. Col. Henderson, of Wilkes county, is stated to have killed, during the combat an Indian Chief, the same who is understood to have headed the party that murdered Lee and Lofters while crossing Cedar creek. The day after the skirmish, Gen. Gaines was ordered with one thousand men to scour and lay waste the adjacent country. He did so, but the enemy had disappeared—five negroes were taken by him.

Fowl-Town, Mickasuka, and some others have been destroyed—1000 head of beef cattle, and several thousand bushels of corn have fallen into our hands. Gen. Jackson has taken possession of St. Marks, a Spanish post on the river of that name—the commander protested against this measure, but did not think proper to oppose its execution with force.—The Army has marched against the town of Suwanney, distant about thirty miles, and it is expected reached there on Thursday last; but it was not believed that the Indians would make a stand at that, or any other place. Some having surrendered themselves prisoners, and the rest have been dispersed—so that, the war with them may be considered nearly at an end. The militia from this state, we understand, will be marched to Trader's Hill, and discharged in a few days. Capt. Arbuthnot, a British officer was captured at St. Marks. If we mistake not, he was engaged during the late contest with Great Britain, in stirring up the Indians to hostility against us, and commanded for some time the negro fort erected on the Appalachicola, which was subsequently demolished by our troops.

By hoisting the British flag, several Indians were deceived on board of some gunboats that ascended the St. Marks river the 31st ult. Among them was a Chief, and the Prophet Francis, both of whom were hanged—the rest were liberated. St. Marks, when taken, was strongly fortified, had twenty pieces of heavy ordnance mounted, and was garrisoned by about fifty men, who have since embarked for Pensacola. M'Intosh, whose vigilance and enterprize, merit commendation, has captured about 100 more prisoners. Journal.

The New Orleans Gazette, of the 3d ult. contains the following reply of Gen. Lallemand, to the publications which have recently appeared in the papers of that place, relating to certain designs of the French emigrants.

Reply to the letter from Natchitoches, published in the Louisiana Gazette, of the 31st March.

The French colonists who have gone to settle on the river Trinity, had no other object than the choice of productive lands, where they might procure laborers and cattle at low prices, and from which they might derive a prompt and productive revenue.—They look for those advantages which are to be derived from a rich soil, by active laborious men; they have no other wish than to cultivate them and to enjoy the tranquility necessary to such an establishment.—They have no connection with any assemblage that has heretofore taken place in those parts, and will never engage either in privateering or smuggling, nor in any other occupation that might render them a subject of disquiet to any people.

Signed, H. LALLEMAND.

New Orleans, April 1, 1818.

OLD SOLDIERS.—At York, Pennsylvania, ten persons, and ten only, appeared, to put in their claims under the late law passed for the relief of the indigent soldiers of the revolution—the oldest was 81 years, the youngest 58, average of the whole 68 years. There is a sketch of the life and character of some of them, in the York Gazette. The following may amuse and interest our readers.

Corporal Michael Elly.—This old stooping, winter beaten and woeworn veteran once had an erect, ruddy front. In the battle of Germantown, he observed a cannon ball approaching his squad, bouncing on the ground from hillock to hillock, threatening the legs of his command with sudden destruction—with admirable presence of mind, he wheeled on his right and left outwards to let the ball pass, and wheeled into his place again as regularly as he would mount guard. "Right," corporal Elly, said his officer, always make way for gentlemen on such swift business; I suppose his orders require despatch."

Joseph Wren.—This old man's body and spirit seem to be equally light. He travels his 30 miles a day with ease. His appearance reminds you of the Egyptian mummies so celebrated for their fresh and life like appearance after the lapse of centuries.—During the deluge (not Noah's flood nor yet Deucalion's, as you might have supposed from his ancient date, but the deluge which buried a third part of our town in ruins, on the ever memorable 9th Aug. 1817) old J. Wren, like the lively bird of his own name, perched himself in the garret of a two story frame house and went to sleep. The house rose on the bosom of the deep, plunged all but the garret into the waves and was dashed from surge to surge till it lodged against a tree. Five persons were drowned! "side by side they lay," in a room of the second story of the house. Joseph slept on. At length when the God of nature held out the olive branch of hope to the terror struck tenants of the roofs of the tottering houses and the flood subsided so that the "dry land appeared"—when the mighty ocean that had been, as it were, created in a moment and precipitated upon us gathered itself into the mild and unassuming Codorus again, Joseph's abode of death, where youth and health and female excellence and manly virtue, had been buried in the waves, was visited and still he slept. When he was awakened he rubbed his eyes, not certain they were his own nor whether he were J. Wren any more; for he knew not where he was, unless it might be in some place on the other side of the grave. Thus indeed has Joseph Wren had "hair breadth escapes" in the "forest wild and city full," and is spared to be made glad by something very unlike the "ingratitude of republics."—What a spectacle is sergeant Thomas' venerable, honorable and ancient squad! Their history is all eventful. Poor, old, lame, blind, deaf and forgetful! They never looked to see this day. They have been bandied about from pillar to post, often without a home or stated place of residence.—Almost every one has lost his discharge and most of them, in the language of William Murphy's petition, have no evidence but their own words, their age, their poverty and their scars, of having faithfully served their country and of being in need of its support. This old man, William Murphy, had the ball which broke his leg at "Stoney Point," together with his discharge and twenty seven pieces of bone taken from his leg, carefully tied up and carried with him as the tokens of his country's gratitude (for he tried for a pension and got none;) but "by an unlucky hit," (of which soldiers have many) he "miss'd them" and has "never seen them more."

INDIAN MURDERS.

Mr. Luprade, from Fort Jackson has informed us that 12 persons have been recentcently murdered near the Poplar Spring in the Alabama Territory, three of whom, Wm. Butler, Esq. Capt. Wm. Lee, and Mr. Gardner, were from Georgia.

Geo. Jour. April 12.

False Swearing.—At the session of the court of Common Pleas of Champaign county, held last week, two Quakers were indicted and put on trial for stealing two hundred pounds of hay. Howell Holycross & John Devour, were called as witnesses for the prosecution, who swore positively that the defendants at different times had acknowledged the stealing of the hay.—The Jury acquitted the Defendants on ten minutes consultation. Judge Parish immediately ordered Holycross and Devour into custody, and proceeded to examine witnesses against them, on a charge of Perjury—the court and spectators were shocked at a full disclosure of the deliberate wickedness of Holycross add Devour. They were bound over for trial at the next session of the court.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, March 24.

A Flanders Mail arrived this morning. The accounts from the maritime places in Holland and the Netherlands continue to speak of the immense damage done by the late storms. One hundred and forty vessels are said to have been lost between the Helder and Calais. While the sea coasts have been ravaged by the storm and tempest, the interior parts of the continent of Europe have been visited by earthquakes.—A violent storm was felt through all Italy on the 23d ultimo. It was so violent in Milan and Turin, that the inhabitants quitted their houses.

The author of Waverly, Guy Mannering, Tales of my Landlord, and Rob Roy has already received as his half of the profits of the sales—104,000 dollars.

The Seneca and Oneida Indians from the United States, after performing for a short time at Liverpool, had proceeded to London, and were engaged for exhibition at Drury Lane Theatre.

GENOA, Feb. 25.

The commander of the squadron of the U. States of America in the Mediterranean, has required the Dey of Algiers to give orders to the cruizers not to take the liberty in future of visiting the American vessels, under any pretext whatever, because, as the plague prevails in the territory, of Algiers, it is much to be feared that the contagion might be spread by these visits. He added, that in case of refusal he had orders to give chase to the Algerine vessels, and to sink them. If all the maritime Powers would use the same energetick language, there would not be so much reason to fear that these cruizers would communicate the plague to us, and their piracies would cease of themselves.

Extract of a letter to a gentleman in Boston, dated, Rio Janeiro, Feb. 8.

"On the 6th inst. I witnessed the splendid ceremony of the coronation of the King of Portugal and the Brazils. It took place in the presence of all the grandees and 15,000 troops, under the title of John VI. An Austrian frigate has arrived from Trieste, with an ambassador extraordinary. The Congress frigate is now here, after a passage of 55 days from Norfolk. The sloop of war Ontario left here about the 1st of November for Valparaiso."

To Tanners, Distillers, and Farmers.

THE subscriber assignee of JARED OLD'S PATENT IRON MILL for Grinding Bark, Corn and Cobb, &c. for the States of Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee, informs the public that they are made and kept for sale by Mr. George Sutton who is sole agent in Pittsburgh to sell Mills in those states, their utility in grinding bark is well known and established to be the best in use. To Distillers they answer a valuable purpose to shell corn and grind the cobb, and by distilling the cobb it is found to make a saving of about one fifth by this method.—To Farmers, to grind feed for cattle, the mill will crack nearly all the corn and grind the cobb quite fine—There are now a considerable number of those mills in use for that purpose, and are highly approved of Distillers and Farmers in the above states are solicite to make trial of them—I will warrant them to answer the purpose as described.

Orders for mills will be attended to by Mr. George Sutton, where they can only be had in Pittsburgh, and will be by him forwarded.

For the information of the public I give this that all mills sold in the above states by agents of Luther Gale, is an infringement on my right, nor has there any of Gales's mills been sold or used in the western country for grinding bark to my knowledge Jared Olds' improvement consists of an Iron hopper cast solid on the cylinder or tube and cogs or sharp pointed teeth placed in rows on the inside of the mill. I therefore forbid all persons from making, using or selling mills of the above description in Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee without authority from myself or Calvin Bates and our agents, as all persons found violating said patent, may rest assured that sooner or later they will pay us for the right, if there is law and justice to recover it.
